ICE OUT OF KANSAS CITY.

COMMERCIAL NEEDS HEEDED.

EVENING TRAINS FOUND TO BE UN-ABLE TO MEET REQUIREMENTS.

Another Step in the Direction of Making Kansas City a Good Place to Do Business In-Affects a Large and Prosperous Territory.

Beginning next Sunday the Pittsburg & Gulf will establish a morning train service out of Kansas City. The commercial necessities of early outgoing morning trains have become so thoroughly recognized that one by one all the railroads are inaugurating such service.

The Pittsburg & Gulf morning train will Icave at 9:45 a. m., and run to Siloam Springs, Ark., for the present. When the Fort Smith branch of the road has been completed the train will run to Fort Smith, probably leaving Kansas City a little earlier in the morning. The local business of the road between Siloam Springs and Kansas City will be largely served by this train, the through train to the Gulf leaving Kansas City at 7:30 p. m., instead of fifty minutes difference in the time of leaving between here and Mena by avoiding stops at the smaller stations.

The new train is an additional one, only for handling the local business out of Kansas City, and that night trains do not meet the commercial needs in this mat-ter. The new morning train service of the Thus traveling men and merchants may make a trip over the road almost or quite as far as Siloam Springs and back in less than twenty-four hours. The distance from Kansas City to Siloam Springs is 230 miles and the road runs through a splendid territory, all of which should be virtually tributary to Kansas City although St. Louis has heretofore secured much of the trade because of superior mail and passenger train facilities. The Pittsburg & Gulf, with its immense business interests, is closely identified with Kansas City. What is best for one is also best for the other. The commercial policy of making Kansas City a suburban willage is as much against the interests of the Gulf as against Kansas City. This fact seems finally to have been realized by the management of the Gulf properties as the establishment of a morning train service as well as evening service indicates.

"There's plenty of the old boys left that are spryer on their feet than I am who would like to get a chance at those Spanish dogs," he continued suddenly, after a moment's silence. "They were afraid to give the boys a chance for their lives and blew them up while they were asleep." And the veteran naval officer continued his denunciation of the treacherous dons in an aerimonious manner.

An old soldier dropped into the undertaker's office at this juncture and naturally enough the trend of the conversation was turned back to the civil war. Before the war "Uncle Joe" had been a carpenter and contractor. He enlisted at New Albany, N. Y., in 1862. He was sent to the Mississippi marine fleet and was given the commission of cantain in charge of the commission of captain in charge of "John Rein," a "woodenclad" used commission of captain in charge of the "John Rein," a "woodenclad" used in transporting troops. Later he was transferred to an ironclad, and passed through seventy-two engagements before the close of the war, and received only one wound, a shot through the calf of the leg. Once he was standing beside the pilot house of a steambout, on the opposite side to the direction from which the bullets of the Confederates were being fired from ambush, when a ball struck a soldier standing beside him in the arm.

"That ball struck the inside of the big bell on the forward end of the deck, while it was ringing, and flew off at right angles—the strangest freak I ever heard of, he declared, in the course of his story. "After the firing ceased we saw that the ball had spun around inside that bell and then flew off in our direction. The lead was on the bell."

The old soldiers continued teiling of adventures on the gunboats and on land, when "Units the" everlation. "But the

The old soldiers continued telling of adventures on the gunboats and on land, when "Uncle Joe" exclaimed: "But the nearest I ever came to being blown to eternity was at the battle of Grand Gulf, in the spring fight, I was standing in the pilot house with six sharp-hooters. The pilot house was covered with belier iron excepting a part of the windows through which we could see. I was just giving an order when a shell crashed through the steel netting over the window and whizzed around in the corner. The fuse had been too long, but it was burning up fast, and everyone of us expected to be blown to atoms in a second. At first I was paralyzed. Then I jumped at the darned thing, and I know I was crazy for a time. It had stuck in a pile of sandbags. I grabbed it up and threw it into the river, lifting it hearly as high as my shoulder to get it through the water. I afterwards tried to it up and threw it into the river, lifting it nearly as high as my shoulder to get it through the window. It blew up just as it struck the water. I afterwards tried to lek up that same sized shell, and couldn't lift it to my shoulder. I don't know how I ever did it, but I tell you those fellows did everything they could after that to show their gratitude."

Then the old soldiers continued telling of scenes they had passed through on the river gunboats, while the Maine and her dead were for the time being forgotten.

Cable Company held a special meeting yesterday and decided to change the motive power of the road from cable to electricity and to make very important extensions of the line during the summer.

The nature of the proposed extensions could not be learned in detail, but the statement was authorized that the line would be built over important territory in the southeastern portion of the city; that it would ultimately reach the northern portion of the city, and would also touch some important points in the western part of the city. The officials declined to say if the line would be extended to the Union depot; they did state that the line, when extended, would have valuable and satisfactory terminals.

Mr. James A. Blair was elected a director to fill the vacancy caused by the death of James Lillis, recently. The executive committee that is located here was given full authority to represent the board in all of the matters connected with the extensions and the business relating to it and to determine just what extensions were to be made. The possibility of a union of forces between the Brooklyn Avenue Cable Company and the Northeast electric line was again made a topic of speculation yesterday by the announcement that the Northeast company had decided to make extensions and improvements and that work would begin at once. If there is any agreement for that purpose the men who know of it are keeping it quiet.

THE GLITTER OF JEWELS.

It Is Seen on All the Up-to-Date Evening Gowns This Winter.

The height of the winter's social season has brought fashion to a sudden blaze of color and jewels, anything that shines being styled a jewel nowadays. Whole gowns are made of spangled net over satin, and the spangles are rhinestone-set. The real diamonds about the neck and in the hair do not shine a bit more beautifully than do the rhinestones, so the result is an affair that dazzles not only the eyes but the senses. Whether the current outbreak of spangles is to spread to other than evening dresses, it is yet too early to tell, but the shiny discs are now in none but fine company. In a gown seen lately they were put in horizontal lines along the skirt portion's front breadth. Others appeared in the net that velled the front of the bodice, and here, too, was some rich black lace. This front breadth was black silk, but the rest, including sleeves and epaulettes, was black velvet. ing styled a jewel nowadays. Whole gowns

When it comes to real gems, women possessing them are as bent on displaying them this winter as if there were never to be another chance. The stones have been strung on chains, and these ropes of sunshine, stars and moon-splinters for the neck are made brilliant by four and five different kinds of stones. Necklaces of the collar order are also being worn, and emeralds, rubles and sapphires lighted up with olamonds are seen. But why go to all that trouble, anxiety and expense? The stones are beautiful, and you can see them a lot better on some one clse than on yourself; but if it comes to collars, a linen collar will do just as well, and better, for most occa-When it comes to real gems, women pos do just as well, and better, for most occa sions. #### ORANGE BLOSSOM LEGEND. Story That Will Be Certain to Interest the February Bride.

Like all familiar customs whose origin is lost in antiquity, the wearing of orange blossoms at a wedding is accounted for in various ways. Among other stories is the following pretty legend from Spain:

An African king presented a Spanish king An African king presented a Spanish king with a magnificent orange tree, whose creamy, waxy blossoms and wonderful fragrance excited the admiration of the whole court. Many begged in vain for a branch of the plant, but a foreign ambassador was tormented by the desire to introduce so great a curiosity to his native land. He used every possible means, fair or foul, to accomplish his purpose, but all his efforts coming to naught he gave up his efforts coming to naught he gave up in despair.

The fair daughter of the court gardener

The fair daughter of the court gardener was loved by a young artisan, but lacked the dot which the family considered necessary in a bride. One day, chancing to break off a spray of orange blossoms, the gardener thoughtlessly gave it to his daughter.

Seeing the coveted prize in the girl's hair the wily ambassador offered her a sum sufficient for the desired dowry, provided she give him the branch and say nothing about it. Her marriage was soon celebrated, and on her way to the altar, in grateful remembrance of the source of all her happiness, she secretly broke off an-hair.

Whether the poor court gardener lost his head in consequence of his daughter's treachery the legend does not state, but many lands now know the wonderful tree, and ever since that wedding day orange blossoms have been considered a fitting adornment for a bride.

DINNER FOR 13 CENTS.

A Club That Combats Superstition Eats at the Mills Hotel. New York.

To vary the monotony of dining in swell restaurants with incidental self-advertisrestaurants with incidental self-advertising. New York's Thirteen Club went to the Mills Hotel No. 1, in Bleecker street, last night, says the New York Press (February 14), and held its 16th regular dinner there. "Citizen" George Francis Train was chairman, committee of arrangements, toastmaster, reception committee, and, in fact, "the whole shooting match."

Each of the 300 guests ate a 13-cent meal, and paid his own check. The menu was printed on paper napkins, and read:

Apple Sauce. Stewed Prunes. Tea. Milk.

At first there was considerable trouble in getting the thirteen delegates from the Vegetarian Society properly cared for. They threw up their hands in horror when a waiter made a mistake and placed dishes of roast beef and lamb potple before them. Finally notates and green peas which Finally potatoes and green peas, which had not come in contact with flesh, were placed before them.

"I selected the Mills Hotel No. 1 for the banquet of the Thirteen Club because the name contains thirteen letters," said Citizen Train. "Bleecker street would have had only thirteen letters if some fool hadn't gone and put a 'c' in it."
